CANDIDATES MEET VOTERS OF SOUTH

Cameron and Williams Have Gone to Tucson and Bisbee—Wells
Follows This Evening

Returning from a trip to the north, where everywhere they met with a most flattering reception, Ralph H. Cameron, candidate for United States senator, and John S. Williams, who is seeking the office of representative in Congress, passed through Phoenix yesterday evening on their way to Tucson and Bisbee.

While there two candidates will spend the next few days meeting friends in the southern towns they do not regard the present trip as one devoted to actual campaign work. That will be reserved for a time subsequent to the primaries.

Judge Edward W. Wells, republican candidate for the nomination for governor, will also make a trip through southern Arizona, beginning today. It is probable he will be in Phoenix for a brief time this evening on his way to the south.

THE WHITE CORDUROY

Is ultra smart?
We've had skirts.
These were for outing.
New winter ones are to wear in the house.

But the suits are used instead of serge.

They are necessarily well cut and trimmed plainly.

Big pearl buttons and sometimes crystal fasten them.

One sees an occasional suit of this material trimmed in Pekin collars and cuffs and a lower skirt effect.

The handsomest ones seen have fur, black lynx or skunk on collars, cuffs and skirt hems.

A feature of some of these corduroy suits is the lovely coat lining, especially in that new sulphur or amber yellow done into broadcases.

No reason why one couldn't have these linings so they could be removed easily and the suit really put into the tub.

Let's hope the utility idea of the white corduroy suit will not appeal to so many that they will become ordinary.

ROOSEVELT DAM IN STATEHOOD SHOW

It is Expected That Phoenix Will Be Represented In El Paso Celebration.

Phoenix will be in two big statehood celebration parades which are to be a part of the jubilee El Paso will give next week in honor of the admission of Arizona and New Mexico as states. Harry Welch, secretary of the board of trade is interested in the project and has suggested a float for the jubilee parades at El Paso. This float, if it is arranged will probably take the form of the Roosevelt dam to be mounted on a float and exhibits of the Salt River valley grouped around it.

Governor Richard E. Sloan will go to El Paso next Thursday to attend the celebration and officiate as the guest of honor at the governors' day doings on Friday October 26. He will be accompanied by his staff and friends and will be the guest of the city and chamber of commerce of El Paso while in El Paso. During governor's day Governor Sloan and Governor Mills of New Mexico will head the governor's parade to be given in the morning, speak on behalf of the two states at the official welcome to be extended them by Governor O. B. Colquett of Texas, and review the United States troops at Fort Bliss in the afternoon. The governors' day program will close with the reception and ball for the governors at the chamber of commerce at which the people of El Paso and the southwest will meet the chief executives and congratulate them for the states on the advent of statehood.

The Os-Aple parade, the closing event of the celebration, will be held Saturday evening. It will be an illuminated parade and will pass through the principal streets. Chinese, Indian, Mexican revolutionary, military and troops from Fort Bliss will participate in the closing event.

THE COSTER GIRL'S PLUMES.
Ostrich plumes are as much of a necessity to the London coster girl on her outings as are the pearl buttons to her masculine companion, and the big trimmed hats with their drooping feathers are familiar in all gatherings of this class. Many of the girls cannot afford to keep their money tied up in useless plumage, and there thrives a brisk industry in the hiring of these feathers. The loan of a single plume for a day costs a quarter, or for a dollar a gorgeous trio may be had for an outing, to be returned promptly the next morning.

Weather conditions cause the terms to fluctuate somewhat, since a wet or foggy day will take the curl out of the feathers and make recurring necessary, for which "Arriet" has to pay an extra quarter—Tid-Bits.

When the big gong that tolls the knell of vacation at Columbia University rang the delegation from the department of household arts, where they teach young women how to juggle flapjacks, launder shirts and purchase meat, found a strange spectacle. For the first time in the history of Columbia, a man has enrolled himself in this hitherto feminine section of the college, and when the real work of the academic year begins Thursday he will join the galaxy of dainty co-eds who are to be guided through the ins and outs of housewifery.

CANDIDATES FORM A BIG HIPPODROME

Two Dozen Democrats Aspirants to Political Offices Have Novel Way to Cultivate Voters.

Probably never before in the history of politics in these United States has there been quite so unique a campaign as that which is now being conducted by the democratic candidates for county offices. A couple of dozen of these political Barkises have organized a barnstorming company and are giving exhibitions in various school houses through the country.

The campaign includes all the local celebrities from Jefferson Davis Adams, candidate for sheriff, who plays the "heavy" to perfection, clear down to Abraham Lincoln Davis, state senatorial aspirant, who is the male soubrette.

The parts have all been assigned with special reference to the fitness of the performers. Leon Jacobs is the insouciant financier, who keeps Wall street in a turmoil every time he appears in New York. Harry Johnson, statesman and hotel clerk, combines the financial ability of J. Pierpont Morgan with the legal acumen of Elihu Root. He is as indispensable to the show as is Castoria to the nursery.

Then there is C. B. Wood, who plays the part of gentleman farmer; Mr. Woolf, who is his first assistant, and W. E. Thomas, who appears in the "living statutory" as a replica of George Washington.

The aggregation appeared at the Osborne school a couple of evenings ago and it is said that besides the 24 candidates themselves, there were several others present. The next performance will be given at the Murphy school this evening.

Now for the Ideal Marriage

Taking the Cue From a Prenuptial
Wedding Contract, Why Couldn't It
Be Construed to Cover a Multitude of Things That Bob Up in Matrimonial Life?—A Few Examples.

This is the day of weird marriages, weirder reasons for divorce and weirder matrimonial contracts.

An artist publicly canes a woman companion and the artist's wife declares he was not "quite himself" when he did it. She intends to cling to him and love him just the same. Probably she feels that after all, in the strictest sense of the word, he did not raise his hand to a woman, and that he is, therefore, still a gentleman at heart. So much for forgiveness.

Another wife, trailing her infidelities through the columns of the newspapers, declares she found it necessary to elope with the man she loved because her husband "fished all day." The old-fashioned wife would have been only too glad of any simple amusement for her spouse which kept him from angling in the stream of metropolitan life with a little midnight supper as bait. However, so much for the unforgivable.

But in Kansas City it appears they do not do things that way. If one did not fear the accusation of snuff-taking one might say the Kansas City wife fathers her nest before she hops into it. Or, is it possible Mrs. S. A. Dickson is a shining example of western foresight? Ante-nuptial financial arrangements are as old as the "dot" system. But a contract which provides for the post-matrimonial behavior of a husband is as modern as an electric ice box in the house. But such a contract is exactly what Mrs. S. A. Dickson insisted upon before going through the charming formality of promising "to love, honor and obey" Mr. Dickson.

This is the statement, sworn to before a notary, that the fond western husband signed:

"To whom it may concern: I, S. A. Dickson, do hereby agree to all and everything herein mentioned, I agree to allow my wife, T. A. Dickson, to do just as she feels inclined to do, and to visit and to go with whom she feels inclined, without giving or showing any jealousy to her for such acts on her part, nor watch or condemn her for so doing. I will not interfere with her in any way whatever. I wish her to feel just as free to come and go as the day she was born.

"I will be good and kind to her and give all my earnings to her. She is to keep them as she sees fit and best. If we should put any of it in the bank it will be so placed as to require the signatures of both of us to draw it out. If I fail to live up to this agreement I will allow her to have a legal separation if she so desires. I further agree to make her the legal heir to all my life insurance or whatever may accumulate in the way of property through our associations."

Yet, even after this, it seems to the casual observer that Mrs. Dickson forgot a few things. To be sure, one has to admit that she had an eye for fundamentals, but is it not the little things which count most? Would she not stand a better chance of happiness had her husband signed a contract which would read something after this fashion?

"I promise always to fasten my wife dresses without grumbling, without jerking and without putting my fingers down the back of her collar till I nearly choke her.

"I shall never ask her what she did with the money I gave her."

"I promise never to let her marry a man with other men before my wife. I realize marriage is a serious business to a woman, whether she only wants to get married, to stay married or to marry somebody else."

"I shall never tell her, after she is all dressed, that the particular color she is wearing is not becoming to her."

"I promise never to tell her that she is growing older or fatter or thinner or grayer, or that she needs a rest."

"I shall never leave my letters about and then chide my wife for the pardurable interest she takes in my affairs."

"I promise ever to be patient and forbearing with my wife when she is in the slightest degree run over at the heels."

"I shall never accuse her, as mother to her, of being too fat, or too thin, or too extravagant, because she takes a taxish when it rains."

"Finally, I promise to allow my wife the choice of states in getting divorce."

But, after all, such a set of rules might place a man at a disadvantage, and the modern woman above all desires to "play fair." Therefore, one could suggest a counter contract in Mr. Dickson's favor to be signed by Mrs. Dickson, a contract to read something like this:

"I promise never to use my husband's military brushes for any purpose whatsoever."

"I agree never to eat corn on the cob where he can see me do it."

"I promise to be reasonably on time for all theater appointments with him—that is, to say not less than five minutes late to more than half an hour."

"I shall let my husband smoke in any part of the house in which he desires to smoke."

"I promise never to say I am going home to my mother, unless I keep the promise."

"I promise never to cold cream my face in my husband's presence."

"I agree not to wear shoes that are in the slightest degree run over at the heels."

"I solemnly aver I shall never wear anything to breakfast that is not spotlessly clean and provided with all its buttons buttoned and its tapes tied."

Can you fancy the ideal existence between two people living up to two such contracts? The divorce courts would languish and the newspapers fade from yellow to a lovely cream color. And the airshaft of every apartment would echo to soft words and gentle speeches.

THE ART OF CARVING
Carving was once a serious thing. The sixteenth century carver was a professional. He had to make the point fit the guest. The size of his slices was the thing. Then he had to know his guests and cut accordingly. A lord, for instance, at the table, and a pike was dished up whole. Smaller fry, and the pike came on in slices. The same procedure with pig. The rank of the officers decided whether it should appear at table in gold leaf or naked, whole or sliced. With bread, too, there was a difference. New, or three days' old baked, was at the discretion of the carver as he sized up the visitors. And as for the apportioning of the tid-bits according to precedence there was no end. The old time carver, in fact, was born and then made.—The London Chronicle.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

In a recent editorial in the Outlook Mr. Roosevelt discussed in an interesting manner the characteristics of the people of Arizona. He told of his speech in Phoenix following the dedication of the dam which bears his name and of the insistence of the people with whom he came in contact for the judiciary recall in the constitution. Roosevelt said he favored the recall but thought it should be exercised by a small and select body of citizens rather than by the people as a whole. In his editorial he says also that whereas the people of Arizona are strongly insistent for the recall he found that over in Texas they were just as strongly against it.
